

About the Symposium:

The Kansas Journal of Law and Public Policy is pleased to present a forum for discussion on the regulation of Genetically Modified Organisms and the science and philosophy behind the regulations. The public concern over modern 'frankenfoods', the potential benefits of the technology, and the different approaches taken in drafting policy has led not only to the interesting debate, but conflicting goals for legislative bodies to try and resolve. The 2007 Symposium promises to provide an opportunity for exploring these issues that are becoming increasingly important to those interested in Kansas and international agricultural concerns.
